

Geopolitical Changes in the UNSC – Is China’s growing global ambition reflected in its communication in the UNSC?

Erik Valentin Schulte*

July 7th 2022

Introduction

Recently, the geopolitical architecture of the world is becoming more and more challenged. Established institutions such as the United Nations (UN) and its lower-tier institutions are shaken by international disputes. One of the most apparent shifts is the ever-growing importance of China in the international arena. This shift in power weights is also reflected in China’s international demeanor, diplomacy and communication. The term “wolf warrior diplomacy” (Zhu 2020) became a widespread synonym of this China’s growing confidence and aggressive representation of its policy objectives. Its claims in the congested and strategically important South China Sea is one of the areas, where the country’s interests are represented vividly. Therefore, it would be interesting if this development and shifts in policy objectives can also be observed in China’s official communication in the current international institutions. China being a permanent member of the United Nations Security Council (UNSC) and the importance of this body, makes it an interesting case to study. The data by Schoenfeld et al. (2019) are an ideal match for my study purposes. My first hypothesis is that China’s use of language became more demanding and direct given in light of the wolf warrior diplomacy. Secondly, I would hypothesis that in general China communicated more in this body and that topics directly dealt with China’s interests. Based on the theory of China’s potential shift in policy objectives in the UNSC, I now conduct the empirical evaluation. For this purpose, I first describe the data preparation process. Secondly, I conduct the actual computer assisted text analysis which presents several measures and examines the hypotheses.

Link between Machine Learning and Text Analysis

The data of the speeches of the Schoenfeld et al. (2019) data are unstructured. Quantitative text analysis – that is employed in this paper – is a machine learning (ML) technique that seeks to automatically gain valuable insights from large amounts of unstructured text data. The major challenge of quantitative text analysis is to take the ambiguities of human language into account – an issue that can only be partially addressed in this paper. An example, is the negation word “not,” that may totally change the context in which certain words are used.

My paper will solely focus on unsupervised machine learning methods that are applied from Dotson (n.d.). In general, quantitative text analysis is covered in parts of ML and Natural Language Processing (NLP). I will cover text mining techniques such as word frequency, text classification such as sentiment analysis and topic modelling. Important challenges to apply ML to text is the complexity of the analysis the conceptual difficulties (e.g. humour/sarcasm in human language) and taking into account cultural norms of communication (Gavrilova 2020). For further reading on the link between text mining and ML, I refer to Žižka, Dařena, and Svoboda (2019).

Data

First of all, I present all relevant data sources and explain essential features to get a proper overview. Afterwards, I explain the process of loading the data into R and how we process the raw text corpus, to obtain meaningful results.

For the empirical analysis we use three main data sources. The main data set comprises UN Security Council debates between January 1995 and December 2020 and was downloaded from Schoenfeld et al. (2019). The official meeting protocols are split into distinct speeches. For every speech, metadata regarding the speaker, the speaker's nation or affiliation, and the speaker's role in the meeting is given. The topic of the meeting is also given. In total, the corpus contains 82,165 speeches extracted from 5,748 meeting protocols. The download file of Schoenfeld et al. (2019) also provides a code book with the exact description of their workflow how to set-up the database as well as a detailed variable description.

The data are split in to a file containing all information about the UNSC meetings, one file about the metadata of the speeches and one file containing the whole text of the speeches. The other two data sources used for are word dictionaries for the sentiment analysis. I decided to apply a dictionary-based sentiment analysis which allows me to evaluate the sentiment of the speech data based on signalling words. The alternative would be a data-driven corpus approach, which is however more sophisticated and not further pursued here. It is crucial for the sentiment analysis, that the dictionaries are suitable for the specific context of analysis. For example, a word list developed for sociology may not be a good fit to analyze text data from for finance, and vice versa. The selection of the right word lists is therefore of uttermost importance to get meaningful and robust results Grimmer and Stewart (2013, 274–75). Hence, I carefully choose only certain categories from the dictionaries which are less prone to missclassification. Two wordlists namely Military and Cooperation are from the most widely used standard dictionary, the Harvard General Inquirer (see Hall (2019)). The other four wordlists: Positive, Uncertainty, Strong Modal and Weak Modal are from “Documentation for the LoughranMcDonald_MasterDictionary”. Word categories that were specially adapted to the financial context by “Documentation for the LoughranMcDonald_MasterDictionary”, such as the negative wordlist, are neglected in my analysis.

Data preparation

In the next step, I import the speech data into R from the data folder of my project file. To be able to process larger amounts of text, I need special packages in R. These include the quanteda, quanteda.textplot and quanteda.textstats. Other libraries like tidyverse, magrittr, dplyr, ggplot2, readtext, and kableExtra are used to manipulate the data and plot it. We also set a seed, so that our results are reproducible.

knitr::opts_chunk$set(fig.width = 6, fig.height = 5, fig.pos="H", fig.pos = 'H')
#load required packages
library(tidyverse)
library(readtext)
library(quanteda)
library(quanteda.textplots)
library(quanteda.textstats)
library(ggplot2)
library(magrittr)
library(gdata)
library(kableExtra)
library(tidytext)
library(dplyr)

#load the UN Security Council Debates dataset
load("data/dataset.RData")
load("data/docs.RData")

```
#set a seed for reproducibility
set.seed(2333)

I then rename the filename column of the data frame containing the metadata of the speeches into doc_id in order to have a common identifier for merging with the actual text data from the speeches (raw_docs).

##rename common column to merge the content of the speeches
meta_speeches <- meta_speeches %>%
  rename(doc_id = filename) |>
  filter(participanttype != "The President")

merge dataset raw with speeches
meta_speeches <- merge(meta_speeches, raw_docs, by = 'doc_id')

In the next step I want to make a corpus from my data. A corpus is the a certain data structure before the tokenization of the text data. It includes document-level variables that are unique to each data point of text, as well as meta-data for documents and for the collection as a whole. The command corpus comes from the quanteda package. Hence, the text column of the meta_speeches data frame are now a corpus. I filter out speeches from the president of the UNSC, as he or she mostly speaks on behalf of the organization and not for their respective country. This reduces the number of speeches by about 30,000 to 50,933 speeches.

#as_corpus_frame(meta_speeches$text, filter = NULL, row.names = NULL)
corp_meta_speeches <- corpus(meta_speeches, text_field = "text") summary(corp_meta_speeches, 1)
```

The summary shows one example of how one observation of the corpus looks like. It has 22 variables and exhibits information on the topics of the speech, speech length, speaker and the link to the speech itself among other variables. I suggest the code book of Schoenfeld et al. (2019) for the exact variable descriptions. I also create a unique corpus just for the speeches held by China. I do this using the corpus_subset command from my previously defined corpus. I also take a subset of the meta_speeches data frame with only the speeches from China. In total there are 3564 speeches by China in the data frame, a total share of 3.82% of all speeches. So there appear to be 1619 speeches from China as participant type president. So, the speeches where China speaks on behalf of the president are excluded.

We can see the meta data of the China corpus including the names of the speakers, the reference to the speech data file, the topic etc., as described above. As a next step, I separate the whole speeches into sentences in tidy format. One column for every sentence of a speech. For that I use the `unnest_tokens` function from the `tidytext` package. This lets the number of observations grow to 1,767,696 million. The problem here is that now after every salutation like “Mr.” so after every point the function creates a new sentence. When we create a data frame for every word as an observation, the number of observation grows to 43,534,652 million. Therefore, we must clean the data further before using them for analysis.

##separates by default into words all speeches from raw docs (here by sentences) variable after tokens
tidy_raw_sentences <- meta_speeches %>% unnest_tokens(sentences_content, text, token = "sentences" )

##separate into words a new variable each word per speech (gives us 47,4 Mio obs.)
tidy_raw_words <- meta_speeches |>
  unnest_tokens(word, text)

The `tidytext` package also come with a list of stop words – words that are not meaningful and that we want to exclude from the analysis. The stop words list contains 1149 words. Our data frame reduces to 19,623,316 million observations – by more than a half.

##remove redundant words (reduces from 47,6 Mio words to 21,4 Mio words)
data(stop_words) ##this comes with a package (a list of unuseful words) tidy_raw_words <- tidy_raw_words %>% anti_join(stop_words)

##count words, after redundant words were removed (only meaningful words)
tidy_raw_words %>%
count(word, sort = TRUE)

This allows me to start with a first analysis. I can plot the most frequent words used in the speeches of the UNSC. For that, I plot the most common words that were used more than 65,000 times in total. The threshold of 65,000 is subjectively chosen and is based on the graphical aesthetics.

Most commonly used words

We can see from the graph that council, security and united are the most frequently used words. This gives are first overview of the most used words.

##plotting most common words (mit mehr als 80.000 Wörtern)
library(scales)
most_common_words_UNSC <- tidy_raw_words %>%
  count(word, sort = TRUE) %>%
  filter(n > 65000) %>%
  mutate(word = reorder(word, n)) %>%
  ggplot(aes(n, word)) +
  scale_x_continuous(labels = comma_format(big.mark = ".", decimal.mark = ",")) +
  geom_col() +
  # ggtitle = (label = "The most common words in the UNSC")+
  labs(y = NULL, title = "Most common words in the UNSC")

most_common_words_UNSC

I also plot the exact same information of the 40 most common words from the UNSC in a visually appealing wordcloud using the wordcloud package.

Load the wordcloud package
library(wordcloud)

Compute word counts and assign to word_counts
word_counts_UNSC <- tidy_raw_words %>% count(word)

wordcloud(
  # Assign the word column to words
  word = word_counts_UNSC$word,
  # Assign the count column to freq
  freq = word_counts_UNSC$n,
  scale=c(2,.4),
  max.words = 40,
  colors = "blue"
)

I then apply the exact same analysis for the data frame from the Chinese speeches.

We can see that China's five most commonly used words are the same as for the UNSC, except that its country name is the most used words. This is not surprising as country's commonly hold speeches referring to them with their country name.

##plotting most common words
most_common_CHN <- tidy_raw_words_CHN %>%
  count(word, sort = TRUE) %>%
  filter(n > 2500) %>%
  mutate(word = reorder(word, n)) %>%

    scale_x_continuous(labels = comma_format(big.mark = ".", decimal.mark = ",")) +
  geom_col() +

Again, I visualize the 40 most common words used by China in a wordcloud using the wordcloud package.

  # Assign the word column to words

  # Assign the count column to freq
  freq = word_counts_CHN$n,
  scale=c(2,.4),
  max.words = 40,
  colors = "red"
```

Next, we want to get further than just plotting the most frequently used words. A central question in text mining and natural language processing is how to quantify what a document is about. One measure of how important a word may be is its term frequency (tf), how frequently a word occurs in a document.

Frequency terms

Next, I calculate frequency terms. The function `get_freqs` creates a list of the frequency of terms that appear in each speech. The function takes the respective corpus as an input and returns the frequencies in the form of a data frame. In the first step, it creates tokens from the text documents. Tokens are a sequence of elementary lexical components, in our case words. Punctuation, separators and stop words like “he,” “do,” or “if” are excluded as they have no meaning for the content and therefore represent no real added value for the analysis. The `dfm()` function is then applied to the tokens to create the document feature matrix (dfm). As the dfm is a very sparse matrix containing the documents as rows and the terms as columns, I aggregate the data over all documents and sort the frequency of the terms in a descending order using the `textstat_frequency()` command. In addition, a special feature of the `get_freqs` function is the weighting parameter, which is set to `FALSE` per default. If it is being activated the frequencies are weighted according to the term-frequency inverse document frequency (tf.idf) weighting scheme. This measures how important a word is to a document compared with a corpus of other documents, e.g. one speech in a collection of speeches. The inverse document frequency of a term is defined as:

In the end we apply the `get_dfm` function to the two corpora and save the result in the variable `freqs_all` and `freqs_CHN` respectively.

#calculate the frequency of terms that appear in each speech. It also creates a document feature matrix
#frequency of each word in the corpus #function takes the respective corpus as an input and returns the frequencies in the form of a data frame
get_freqs <- function(corp_meta_speeches, weighting = TRUE){ tokens <- tokens(corp_meta_speeches, remove_punct = T, remove_separators = T, include_docvars = T) tokens <- tokens_remove(tokens, stopwords("en")) dfm <- tokens %>% dfm()
  freqs <- textstat_frequency(dfm)

  if(weighting == TRUE){
    freqs$term_frequency <- freqs$frequency / sum(freqs$frequency) freqs$inverse_doc_freq <- log10( length(corp_meta_speeches) / freqs$docfreq )
    freqs$frequency <- freqs$term_frequency*freqs$inverse_doc_freq
  }
  return(freqs)
}

freqs_CHN <- get_freqs(corp_China,weighting=TRUE)
freqs_all <- get_freqs(corp_meta_speeches,weighting = TRUE)

#Mr. und Mrs. is still inside, maybe you can research something on the gender of the diplomats

We then get a new data frame with each word, the frequency (percentage share of appearance of all words), the rank based on the frequency, the total document frequency of the words, the `term_frequency` and the `inverse_term_frequency`. We will come back and make use of this at a later stage.

I also create a data frame which counts usage of every word in all speeches. This shows that we have 13494 unique words in the data frame used by China after deleting the stop words. I do the same but count the frequency for every word used by China by speech. I will use these newly created data frames for my subsequent 5. It should be noted here that I only further proceed with the corpus for the Chinese speeches giving the scope limitations of this project. Nevertheless, it would be interesting to pursue an in depth comparison of the general UNSC language compared to China's use of language. I solely put my attention to the Chinese speeches in the following while keeping the confidence to draw meaningful conclusions from the analysis.

speech_words_CHN <- tidy_raw_words_CHN %>%
  # unnest_tokens(word, text) %>%
  count(word, sort = TRUE) |>
  mutate(total = sum(n))

speech_words_CHN_per_speech <- tidy_raw_words_CHN %>%
  # unnest_tokens(word, text) %>%
  count(speech, word, sort = TRUE) |>  ##now sorted by speech
  mutate(total = sum(n))

Visualizing term frequency in China's speeches

The graph shows the number of times a word appears in the speeches divided by the total number of terms (words) in the speeches. There are very long tails to the right for the Chinese speeches (those are extremely rare words) that I do not include in the plot. Many words occur rarely and few words occur frequently.

ggplot(speech_words_CHN, aes(n/total)) +
  geom_histogram(show.legend = FALSE) +
  xlim(NA, 0.0009) +
  labs(
    title = "Term frequency distribution in China's speeches", subtitle = "Distribution of frequency of words divided by total words"
  )

Term frequency distribution in China's speeches
Distribution of frequency of words divided by total words

facet_wrap(~book, ncol = 2, scales = "free_y")

The distribution we can see here is common in language. These long-tailed distributions are very common in natural language (like books, a lot of text from a website, or spoken words). Hence, the relationship between the frequency that a word is used and its rank has been the subject of study. A famous mathematical approach to this area is called Zipf's law. It is named after George Zipf, a 20th century American linguist. Zipf's law states that the frequency that a word appears is inversely proportional to its rank Silge and Robinson (2017). Words occur in a systematic frequency distribution with very few words used very frequently and a plethora of words used less frequent. This distribution follow a power law called Zipf's law Piantadosi (2014). I proceed by calculating the rank of each word and its frequency.

freq_by_rank_CHN <- speech_words_CHN %>% mutate(rank = row_number(), `term frequency` = n/total) %>%
  ungroup()

head(freq_by_rank_CHN)
```

```
word      n total rank term frequency
1         china 9476 522480     1  0.01813658
2 international 8150 522480     2  0.01559868
3      security 7414 522480     3  0.01419002

4	peace	7095	522480	4	0.01357947
5	united	5980	522480	5	0.01144541
6	nations	5550	522480	6	0.01062242

The rank column here tells us the rank of each word within the frequency table; the table was already ordered by n so we could use `row_number()` to find the rank. Then, we can calculate the term frequency in the same way we did before. Zipf's law is often visualized by plotting rank on the x-axis and term frequency on the y-axis, on logarithmic scales. Plotting it in this way, an inversely proportional relationship, will have a constant, negative slope.

We keep in mind here that the Zipf's law figure is in log-log coordinates. We see that the relationship between rank and frequency does have the expected negative slope. It is not quite constant, though; perhaps we could view this as a broken power law. Let's see what the exponent of the power law is for the middle section (between ranks 10 and 500) of the rank range (see Silge and Robinson 2017). I further regress the log of the term frequency on the rank for the data between the ranks of 10 to 500 and fit a line with the respective intercept and coefficient in 6.

rank_subset <- freq_by_rank_CHN %>% filter(rank < 500, rank > 10)

lm(log10(`term frequency`) ~ log10(rank), data = rank_subset)
```

```
##
Call:
lm(formula = log10('term frequency') ~ log10(rank), data = rank_subset)
##
Coefficients:
(Intercept)  log10(rank)
-1.1924      -0.8191

The classic versions of Zipf's law can be expressed as follows: $\text{frequency} \propto \frac{1}{\text{rank}}$

The r-th most frequent word has a frequency that scales according to the above formula. The frequency rank is the r-th most frequent words and frequency is the frequency of a word in a natural corpus (speech in our case).

freq_by_rank_CHN %>%
  ggplot(aes(rank, `term frequency`)) + geom_abline(intercept = -1.19, slope = -0.81, #take these numbers from the regression above color = "red", linetype = 4) + geom_line(size = 1.1, alpha = 0.8, show.legend = FALSE) + scale_x_log10() + scale_y_log10() +
  labs(
    title = "Fitting an exponent for Zipf's Law with China's speeches in the UNSC")

We have found a result close to the classic version of Zipf's law for the corpus of China's UNSC speeches. The deviations we see here at high rank are not uncommon for many kinds of language; a corpus of language often contains fewer rare words than predicted by a single power law. The deviations at low rank are more unusual compared to the deviations from the fitted line at high rank. China uses a lower percentage of uncommon words than many collections of language, which may indicate the complexity of the diplomatic language (see Burhanudeen 2006).

The `bind_tf_idf()` function

The idea of tf-idf is to find the important words for the content of each document by decreasing the weight for commonly used words and increasing the weight for words that are not used very much in a collection of documents, in this case, the speeches by China in the UNSC. Calculating tf-idf attempts to find the words that are important (i.e., common) in a text, but not too common.

The `bind_tf_idf()` function in the `tidytext` package takes a tidy text data set as input. One column (word here) contains the terms/tokens, one column contains the documents (speech in this case), and the last necessary column contains the counts, how many times each speech contains each term (`n` in this example). I create a new data frame for this, as the `bind_tf_idf` function requires a document entry (speeches in my case).

CHN_tf_idf <- speech_words_CHN_per_speech %>% #89955 variables...
  bind_tf_idf(word, speech, n)
```

```
head(CHN_tf_idf)
```

```
speech      word  n total      tf      idf      tf_idf

The idf and thus tf-idf are zero for these most common words (China). Unsurprisingly, the word China appears very often in the speeches of China, so the idf-term (which will then be the natural log of 1) is zero. The inverse document frequency (and thus tf-idf) is close to zero for words that occur in many of the speeches in a collection. This is, in fact, the procedure how this approach decreases the weight for common words. The inverse document frequency will be a higher number for words that occur in fewer speeches.

Here we see important words that are in fact important in these respective speeches. None of them occurs in all of speeches. But they are important, characteristic words for each speech within the corpus of the UNSC speeches by China. We can see that one speech (speech 129) most likely talked about the still ongoing territorial disputes in the South China Sea, as nansha, islands, and sea were important words in that speech.

Sentiment Analysis

For the sentiment analysis, I have to get dictionaries for my purpose into R. I choose to do a dictionary-based approach as I am a beginner in text analysis. In accordance with processing of the speech data, we lower all dictionary terms so that the matching function is case sensitive. Two wordlists, namely Military and Cooperation are from the most widely used standard dictionary, the Harvard General Inquirer Hall (2019). I manually collected this word list and saved them in an excel file. It was difficult to obtain due to restricted access. I create the new data frame called “dict” with these two categories after making all words to lower case letters.

library(readxl)
GI_dic <- read_excel("~/ownCloud/Uni Göttingen/Stellenbosch University/Data Science Methods/Github Proj

GI_dic$military <- tolower(GI_dic$military) #make words to lower case in military columns GI_dic$powercoop <- tolower(GI_dic$powercoop) #mark words to lower case in powercoop column colnames(GI_dic) <- tolower(colnames(GI_dic))

dict <- GI_dic |>
  select(military, powercoop)
```

The second dictionary I am using is the one by “Documentation for the LoughranMcDonald_MasterDictionary”. From this I append the wordlists “Positive,” “Uncertainty,” “Strongmodal” and “Weakmodal” to my dictionary.

loughran <- read_excel("~/ownCloud/Uni Göttingen/Stellenbosch University/Data Science Methods/Github Proj

colnames(loughran) <- tolower(colnames(loughran))
Select the following 4 categories for my analysis, exclude negative inter alia
loughran <- loughran[c("positive", "uncertainty", "strongmodal", "weakmodal")]
make all words to lower case
loughran$positive <- tolower(loughran$positive) loughran$uncertainty <- tolower(loughran$uncertainty) loughran$strongmodal <- tolower(loughran$strongmodal) loughran$weakmodal <- tolower(loughran$weakmodal)

#cbindX = column-binds objects with different number of rows.
dict <- cbindX(dict, loughran)
colnames(dict) <- c("Military", "Cooperation", "Positive", "Uncertainty", "Strongmodal", "Weakmodal")
```

Table: Selected words from the dictionary.

Military	Cooperation	Positive	Uncertainty	Strong modal	Weak modal
Weapon	Peace	Strengthen	Variation	Always	Apparently
Fleet	Joint	Stabilize	Unknown	Best	Depending
Ammunition	Partnership	Progress	Perhaps	Strongly	Might
War	Mediation	Improve	Appear	Unparalleled	Possible
Troop	Consensus	Prosperity	Conditional	Undisputed	Sometimes

My self-created tidy dictionary contains two columns with 863 words and six sentiment categories in total. 88 words belong to the Cooperation word list, 79 to the Military word list, 353 to the Positive word list, 19 to the strong modal word list, 297 to the uncertainty word list and 27 to the weak modal word list. The table above gives examples of the words the sentiment categories comprise of.

##also create a tidy dictionary, we I have 863 words with 5 sentiment categories in total
tidy_dict <- dict %>% tidyr::gather("Sentiment", value, 1:6) |>
  rename(word = value) |>
  drop_na()
#make a tibble out of it
as_tibble(tidy_dict)
```

Next, present my dictionary also graphically in 8. By far most of my sentiment indicating words are in the “positive” and “uncertainty” category.

```
sentiment_counts <- tidy_dict %>%
  count(Sentiment) %>%
  mutate(sentiment2 = fct_reorder(Sentiment, n)) ggplot(sentiment_counts, aes(x = sentiment2, y = n)) +
  geom_col() + coord_flip() +
  labs(
    title = "Sentiment Counts in my personalised dictionary", subtitle = "Number of Counts for the six Sentiment Wordlists", x = "Sentiment",
    y = "Counts"
  )
```

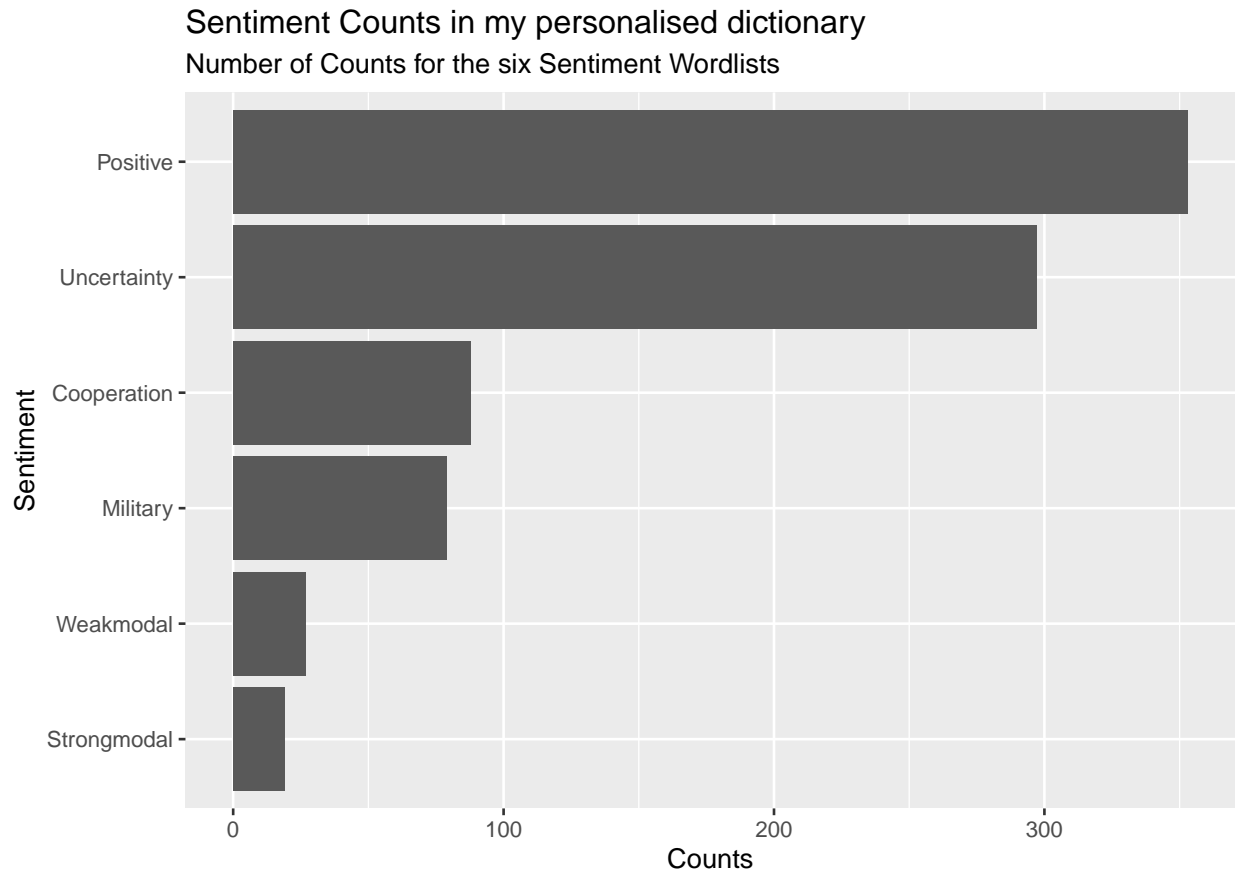

Figure 8: Sentiment Counts per sentiment in my dictionary.

Join the dictionary with the speech data

For the sentiment analysis I want to evaluate the sentiment of the words of the speech corpus. Hence, I create a new data frame using the `inner_join` function that appends the my sentiment dictionary in tidy format to the data frame from China containing all words. I can then see that out of the 522,480 words used by China, 44,588 match to my dictionary (8.53%). I then mutate a new column which calculates the share of the sentiment used. For China, we can see that 38.07% of the sentiments fall into the cooperation word list, 10% in the military word list, 47.86% in the Positive sentiment word list, 3.28% in the uncertainty word list and very small shares in the strongmodal and weakmodal categories. What is apparent at first is that, although the uncertainty word list has a multiple times higher share on the words in my dictionary, it is the reverse in the share of sentiments in China's speeches.

sentiment_review_CHN <- tidy_raw_words_CHN |>
  inner_join(tidy_dict)
```

```
Joining, by = "word"
```

```
sentiment_review_CHN |>
  count(Sentiment) |>
  mutate(share_sentiment_category = n/44588)
```

##	Sentiment	n	share_sentiment_category
1	Cooperation	16976	0.380730241
2	Military	4463	0.100094196
3	Positive	21339	0.478581681
4	Strongmodal	222	0.004978918
5	Uncertainty	1461	0.032766664
6	Weakmodal	127	0.002848300

We can further see the most words that appear both in my dictionary and in China's speeches. The high share of the cooperation sentiment is driven by the very frequent use of the word "peace" (7095 times). This is followed by the words cooperation, stability, strengthen, achieve and progress in descending order.

sentiment_review_CHN |>
  count(word, Sentiment) |>
  arrange(desc(n)) |>
  head()
```

##	word	Sentiment	n
1	peace	Cooperation	7095
2	cooperation	Cooperation	2587
3	stability	Positive	2560
4	strengthen	Positive	1308
5	achieve	Positive	1050
6	progress	Positive	1046

Visualizing sentiments

First, I count the most common words in the speech that match the six respective sentiment word list. I group them by sentiment and filter the ten most common words for each category and order them in descending order.

#sentiment_review_CHN2 <- sentiment_review %>%
filter(sentiment %in% c("positive", "negative"))
word_counts_CHN2 <- sentiment_review_CHN %>%
  count(word, Sentiment) %>%
  group_by(Sentiment) %>% top_n(10, n) %>%
  ungroup() %>%
  mutate(
    word2 = fct_reorder(word, n)
```

In this graph, I visualized the sentiments of each of the six categories, so that we can see the most common words for each category. In the Cooperation sentiment word list, the word peace appears by far the most with more than 6000 appearances. from the military word list, "armed," "force" and "draft" are most used. An interesting results is that while my dictionary consists by far more words from the uncertainty list than the military list, the sentiment words counts from China's speeches from the military list by far exceed the ones from the uncertainty list. This could indicate that China uses a more aggressive military jargon. But it could also be the case that the military dictionary is simply fitting the context of the UNSC speeches better than the uncertainty word list.

ggplot(word_counts_CHN2, aes(x = word2, y = n, fill = Sentiment)) +
  geom_col(show.legend = FALSE) +
  facet_wrap(~ Sentiment, scales = "free") +
  coord_flip() +
  labs(
    title = "Sentiment Word Counts China",
    x = "Words"
  )
)
```

Chinese sentiments over time

The following gives a table of the counts of the sentiments by Year.

```
sentiment_over_time_CHN <- sentiment_review_CHN |>
  count(year, Sentiment) |> #see how genius the spread command is spread(Sentiment, n)

We can also plot this nicely in a graph, which shows the number of the sentiment words used over time for each of the six sentiment categories. For this I plot a graph over time for each of the six sentiment categories, whose code I do not show here.

I then use the gridExtra package to display the individually created graphs in one graph.

#one line of code to put the pictures in one graph

```
library(gridExtra)
```

```
CHN_sentiment_development <- grid.arrange(Cooperation_CHN, Military_CHN, Positive_CHN, Strongmodal_CHN,

The graph yields interesting result. First, there appear to be a general trend that the Sentiments increases over time in all six categories, indicating more matches of China's words used and the dictionary. However, this could be due to a simple increase in speeches held by China, especially since the inauguration of Xi Jinping as president in 2012. The cooperation, military, positive and uncertainty sentiment categories all exhibit similar patterns of time. The strong- and weak modal list is more volatile, which is however also driven by the small number of total sentiments in these lists because they comprise of few words.

Relationships between words

I will now explore some of the methods tidytext offers for calculating and visualizing relationships between words in the speeches. This includes the token = "ngrams" argument, which tokenizes by pairs of adjacent words rather than by single words as I did for the tidy_raw_words_CHN data frame. I use the function to tokenize into consecutive sequences of words, called n-grams. By seeing how often word X is followed by word Y, we can then build a model of the relationships between them. Note here that Chinaspeeches is not cleaned from the stopwords list, this is also applied in Silge and Robinson (2017).

```
bigram_CHN <- Chinaspeeches |>
  unnest_tokens(bigram, text, token = "ngrams", n = 2)

#head(bigram_CHN)
```

The data structure is now not a pure tidy format anymore, but it still has one row per token, in a sense that each token comprises two words. We can still use the tools for tidy data. Similar to single tokens before we can count the most common bigrams.

bigram_CHN <- bigram_CHN |>
  count(bigram, sort = TRUE)
head(bigram_CHN)
```

```
bigram      n
1           of the 17766
2           in the  7313
3           to the  6042
4          and the  5662
5    united nations  5478
6 the international  5274
```

We can see that by far the most common bigram is “of the,” occurring 17766 times followed by other meaningless common words. These are stop-words that we want to remove. I use tidyr’s `separate()`, which splits a column into multiple based on a delimiter. This lets us separate it into two columns, “word1” and “word2,” at which point we can remove cases where either is a stop-word.

```
bigrams_separated_CHN <- bigram_CHN %>% separate(bigram, c("word1", "word2"), sep = " ")

bigrams_filtered_CHN <- bigrams_separated_CHN %>%
  filter(!word1 %in% stop_words$word) %>%
  filter(!word2 %in% stop_words$word)

new bigram counts:
bigram_counts_CHN <- bigrams_filtered_CHN %>%
  count(word1, word2, sort = TRUE)

head(bigram_counts_CHN)
```

```
word1    word2 n
1 _capacity building 1
2         0         5 1
3         06      4607 1
4         06      4649 1
5         06     48422 1
6         06     52444 1

From the output we can see that (unsurprisingly) the most common bigram is “united nations,” appearing 5478 times. More meaningful is the bigram “middle east,” which suggests that conflicts in the middle east were often on the agenda when “china spoke” (1677 times) in the UNSC.

Next, I want to recombine the words of the bigrams. tidyr’s `unite()` function is the inverse of `separate()`, and lets us merge the words into one column again. Thus, we may find the most common bigrams not containing stop-words.

```
bigrams_united_CHN <- bigrams_filtered_CHN %>% unite(bigram, word1, word2, sep = " ")
```

```
bigrams_united_CHN

Topic Modelling

Next, I want to divide the speeches into natural groups so that we can draw conclusion from them separately. Topic modeling belongs to the subgroup of unsupervised classification of documents such as speeches in my case. This is akin to clustering numeric data where natural groups are formed even in the non-existence of them. For topic modelling we need to create document term matrices (dtm). Sparsity of a matrix refers to how many zeros it contains. It should contain one row for each speech given by China. With the `cast_dtm` command from the `tidytext` package, we can count each word in each speech and then creates a dtm from the word counts per speech. The sparsity of the dtm for my analysis is 86 % and a maximal term length of 55.

```
tidy_raw_words_CHN %>%
  count(word, speech) %>%
  cast_dtm(speech, word, n)

<<DocumentTermMatrix (documents: 45, terms: 13494)>>
Non-/sparse entries: 86955/520275
Sparsity          : 86%
Maximal term length: 55
Weighting          : term frequency (tf)
```

I further create the `dtm_review_CHN` data frame which casts the word counts by speech into a DTM. I then save it in matrix form and present exemplary structure of this matrix that is used for my subsequent topic analysis.

```
dtm_review_CHN <- tidy_raw_words_CHN %>%   #assign dtm to tidy_CHN_dataframe
  count(word, speech) %>%
  cast_dtm(speech, word, n) |>             #Cast the word counts by speech into a DTM as.matrix()

dtm_review_CHN[1:4, 2001:2008] #this shows output for rows 1-4 and columns 2000-2008
```

```

4         1         0  0         1         0         0         0         0

Latent Dirichlet allocation (LDA) is commonly used method for fitting topic models. LDA is based on two principles: First, each document (speech) is treated as a mixture of topics and, secondly, each topics a mixture of words. This means that each document (speech) may contain certain proportions of each topic and each word may appear in both topics. LDA estimates both of these simultaneously. Finding the combination of words that may be associated with both (or several) topics, but also finding the combination of topics that best explains each document (speech). This gives the possibility that speeches may have similar content eventually and not being treated as separate entities, which mimics the natural use of human natural language (Silge and Robinson 2017).

Using Latent Dirichlet Allocation (LDA): Two-topic LDA model

Using the LDA function fits out topic model and gives all details of the model fit like how words are associated with the speeches and how topics are associated with speeches. The method for fitting is the “Gibbs” algorithm, whose concept I will not explain here. I refer to Tomar (2018).

library(topicmodels)
lda_out_CHN <- LDA(
  dtm_review_CHN,
  k = 2,
  method = "Gibbs",
  control = list(seed = 42)
)

#glimpse(lda_out_CHN)
```

This gives a tibble of 26988 words that are assigned to two topics. beta gives the word-topic probabilities.

```
lda_topics_CHN <- lda_out_CHN %>%
  tidy(matrix = "beta")
lda_topics_CHN %>%
  arrange(desc(beta))
```

```
# A tibble: 26,988 x 3
topic term      beta
<int> <chr>    <dbl>
1     1 china    0.0217
2     2 international 0.0191
3     1 council   0.0179
4     2 peace     0.0163
5     2 china     0.0159
6     1 security  0.0146
7     2 security  0.0139
8     2 nations   0.0128
9     2 countries  0.0127
10    2 united    0.0126
# ... with 26,978 more rows
```

For example, the term “security” has a 0.0146 probability of being generated from topic 1, but a 0.0139 probability of being generated from topic 2 – hence very similar.

```
lda_out_CHN %>%
  tidy(matrix = "beta")

# A tibble: 26,988 x 3
topic term      beta
<int> <chr>    <dbl>
1     1 _capacity 0.00000559
2     2 _capacity 0.00000304
3     1 0        0.00000559
4     2 0        0.00000304
5     1 06       0.00000508
6     2 06       0.0000125
7     1 07       0.0000412
8     2 07       0.00000304
9     1 08       0.00000559
10    2 08       0.0000277
# ... with 26,978 more rows
```

```
word_probs_CHN <- lda_topics_CHN %>% group_by(topic) %>% # Keep the top 15 highest word probabilities by topic top_n(15, beta) %>%
  ungroup() %>%
  mutate(term2 = fct_reorder(term, beta)) #this is a factor ordered by word probability
```

I obtain a graph that plots per topic the 15 words with the highest word probability (beta). For the first topic I would assign the topic model description: problem-solving. The most common words for topic 1 are china, council, international and security. For the second topic, I suggest the topic model represents Cooperation with common words such as international, development, community and cooperation. However, both topics appear akin to each other as several words appear in both topics.

Plot term2 and the word probabilities
ggplot(word_probs_CHN, aes(term2, beta, fill = as.factor(topic))) +
  geom_col(show.legend = F) +
  # Facet the bar plot by topic
  facet_wrap(~ topic, scales = "free") +
  coord_flip()

We can also check which terms have the biggest difference in β between the two topics. According to Silge and Robinson (2017), this can be estimated by the log ratio between the two topics ($\log_2(\frac{\beta_2}{\beta_1})$). I filter this set of words only the most common words in both topics, namely those that have a β greater than 1/500 in at least one topic. I further filter to log ratios bigger than five or smaller than minus five.

library(tidyr)

beta_wide_CHN <- lda_topics_CHN %>%
  mutate(topic = paste0("topic", topic)) %>% pivot_wider(names_from = topic, values_from = beta) %>% filter(topic1 > .002 | topic2 > .002) %>%
  mutate(log_ratio = log2(topic2 / topic1)) |>
  filter(log_ratio > 5 | log_ratio < -5) |>
  arrange((desc(log_ratio)))

beta_wide_CHN
```

```
# A tibble: 38 x 4
term          topic1 topic2 log_ratio
<chr>         <dbl>  <dbl>    <dbl>
1 development  0.000000508 0.0111     14.4
2 conflict     0.000000508 0.00816     14.0
3 peacekeeping 0.000000508 0.00524     13.3
4 national     0.000000508 0.00499     13.3
5 strengthen   0.000000508 0.00398     12.9
6 afghanistan  0.000000508 0.00360     12.8
7 conflicts     0.000000508 0.00318     12.6
8 capacity     0.000000508 0.00306     12.6
9 representative 0.000000508 0.00305     12.6
10 armed       0.000000508 0.00292     12.5
# ... with 28 more rows
```

From the graph we can see that words more common in topic 2 (positive log_ratio) are such as development, peacekeeping, afghanistan and reconstruction. Topic 1 was very much shaped by the conflicts in Syria and Iraq and Sudan as the negative log ratio suggests. This confirms that the general topics are somewhat similar given the mandate of the mandate and nature of the UNSC. However, the words appear in different contexts of conflicts as the country names in each topic suggests.

```
beta_wide_CHN |>
ggplot(aes(x = log_ratio, y = reorder(term, -log_ratio))) +
  geom_col(show.legend = FALSE) +
  labs(
    title = "Words with greatest difference in beta in topic 1 and 2", subtitle = "With log ratio bigger than five and smaller than minus five"
  )
```

Speech-topic probabilities

The second part of LDA besides topics as a mixture of words was documents (speeches in this case) as a mixture of topics. This per-speech-per-topic probabilities is called gamma.

```
lda_document_CHN <- lda_out_CHN %>% tidy(matrix = "gamma") head(lda_document_CHN)
```

```
# A tibble: 6 x 3
document topic gamma
<chr>      <int> <dbl>
1 10          1 0.400
2 20          1 0.277
3 2           1 0.680
4 4           1 0.533
5 14          1 0.341
6 16          1 0.280

The values are estimates of the share of words from a speech that are generated from the respective topic. Here the model estimates that for example 40% of the words in speech number 10 were generated from topic

1, while for speech number 2 the percentage amounts to 68. We can state that all speeches were drawn from a mix of the two topics, but to a different extent. Document 28 had the lowest gamma value suggesting that it was majorly drawn from topic 2, having a gamma from topic 1 closer to zero (0.17). Therefore, I tidy() the document-term matrix and check what the most common words in that document were.

```
doc28 <- tidy(dtm_review_CHN) %>%
  dplyr::filter(document == 28) %>%
  arrange(desc(count))

doc28 #code works but does not knit
```

The words appear to be very general words most likely about efforts to restore peace and security for certain conflict, which fits well with topic 2 which I labelled as “Cooperation.”

Three topics LDA

Now, we can see the results when we run three topic models by just changing the k-parameter in the LDA function. From the graph we can see that the words between the three topics appear to be similar, which suggests to stick with two topics.

Conclusion

All in all we can say that the data by Schoenfeld et al. (2019) is very rich and perfectly suitable for conducting text analysis.
